The Regents Center for Learning Disorders at Georgia State University has several missions:

1. providing evaluations for students
2. recommending appropriate accommodations
3. developing new ways to help students with learning disorders
4. training graduate students to better understand and assess learning disorders
5. research to help us learn more about learning disorders

We will be developing many research projects at the Center to help us better understand the types of learning problems that college students may experience and to find out what things can help students with learning disorders succeed in college. You can provide valuable assistance to us in this area if you are willing to participate in our ongoing research activities. If you would be willing to consider participating, please read and sign the following statement.

I would be willing to be contacted by the Regents Center in the future to hear about research projects available for my participation. I understand that agreeing to be contacted does not mean that I agree to participate in any project. I can make this decision after hearing about what a particular project involves. I also understand that choosing to be contacted will not affect my evaluation and/or the recommendations of the Regents Center regarding my academic needs.
